His feats on skates are simply marvellous, doing hand-springs, somersaults, etc., with the greatest ease. All lovers of athletic sports should not fail to see him.

THE INSANE HOSPITAL.

Lectures by Drs. Fletcher and Walker Yesterday on the Treatment of the Insane.

College of Indiaua and other colleges assembled 1:30 yesterday. Several lady students of medibust intellect of the sex which has hitherto had almost exclusive control of the treatment of the diseases that we are heir to. mid they were invited to witness the first public clinic ever made in that hall, not because they were supposed to be moved by the vulgar curiosity of some persons as to the general treatment of the insane, but because it was needful for the general practitioner to discriminate between cases of delirium, typhoid fever, puerpal fever, epilospay or paralysis and true insanity. Many patients were sent to the Insane Hospital who could be better treated at home. Hysteria and other temporary diseases had manifestations that close-ly similated insanity, and patients suffering from mere physical disease were often sent to the Insane Hospital, and the injustice of this was more of an evil than the public expenditure occasioned. There was and ever would be a prejudice against convalescent insane patients, the timid avoided them from fear, and the rooust from disgust. Insane persons are really adult obliden, and should be disease. All that could be done in such cases was treated with the kindness and firmness shown to entidren, and above all the truthfulness which our parents expect from and manifest to children should be in daily exercise toward the insane: no greater error could be made than of Sheriffs and guards, who deluded insane persons into the balief that they were being conveyed to New York, or some place, to see a distinguished doctor, or to meet friends: it often took months to dispel this meet friends: it often took months to dispel this illusion and to make the patients feel that they were not still the victims of studied fraud. Wisdom and humanity dictated that patients should be told plainly that they were being conveyed for treatment to a Hospital for the Insane. It was greatly to be regretted that about fifty or sixty medicial practitioners served to monopolize the knowledge of the pathology of insanity. This is deplorable. Specialists were, and ever would be, needful, but every general practitioner abould be able to treat and heal the milder forms of insanity, and to judge between delirium and true insanity. The press frequently commented on the cruel treatment of the insane in hospitals. He was glad of it; even when the criticisms were made, he was glad to read them. In a hospital like this, where there were forty-eight wards and from 1,400 to 1,500 patients, it was impossible to hear every word spoken, to see every act done by all the attendants; unkindness, perhaps absolute cruelty, might be occasionally perhaps absolute cruelty, might be occasionally perpetrated on a patient by an attendant. When the press heard of it, it was its bounden duty to speak, and speak plainly. Discharge always followed conviction of guilt in this hospital. All wards of the hospital were open to public inspection; no secrets were held in its management the surveillance of the press was welcomed. The management were glad when newspapers demounced improper conduct on the part of subordinates, as it strengthened the determination of the physicians to remove unkind or negligent at tendants. Dr. Isaac C. Walker said that he was not there to

Dr. Isasc C. Walker said that he was not there to deliver a seneral disquisition on insanity, but to point several especial forms of disease. The first case was one of hemiplegia, the case as reported by Dr. Walker, patient seventy-five years of age, in hospital six years, a physician himself. The hemiplegia was on the right side and affected his walk but not his speech, and subjected him to delusions. There was a lapse in his life of ten years (he was eighty-six years old when he came and is eighty-six now.) He claimed to be "duped" by means of tubes connecting with his room, and that ants or bugs cr. wled over nim. The patient, as Dr. Fletcher testified, was a practitioner of medicine thirty five years ago, and on Dr. Walker requesting him to adago, and on Dr. Walker requesting him to address the assembly on medical subjects, he said that "this was one of his two headed days, and he would address the gentlemen some other day."

The patient had a fine head, from a phrenologist's toint of view, and his insantive usually unattended by violent outbreaks, was evidently the result of hemiplegia. His conduct on the atage was that of self-educated and very grave physician in good practice. Dr. Walter, commenting on the case, said that the word "appolexy" was widely misused and generally misunderstood.

was widely misused and generally misunderstood. He would use it to-day as applicable to cases where a blood vessel of the brain had burst, producing paralysis of the body on the opposite side to the blood vessel. This was a cause or insanity, especially notable among old people and brain workers. There might, however, be hemiplegic insanity without hemorrhage, or even rupture of a blood vessel. Valvular insufficiency of the beart or other causes might consion it. The next patient was aged stry. He occupation was that of a carpenter. His general health was good, and, though ne de-

He had a clear sense of the humorous nature of his situation, and laughed with the glee of a child. Sensation, Dr. Walker said. traveled at the rate of 1,100 feet per second; really there was a distinct measurement of time, even in healthy people, between receipt of injury and knowledge of the injury, but in locomotor ataxia the senses were dulled and a much longer time in-

Fletcher said the case was new to them, and the patient regarded it as very funny. His father was an intemperate man. The only accident ever befalling the patient was falling from a wagon, which cut the head, but did not at the time seem langerous; there was no fracture of the skull. He had grown steadily ever since admission. There was an evident deficiency in the sympathetic nerves, and of cutaneous circulation. When told to close his eyes and touch his nose with his finger, he touched his forehead with his whole hand. The poor fellow enjoyed the exhibition of himself to the students with childish glee. This, Dr. Walker said, was one of the most roublesome cases for treatment. You could see that paralysis was present, but the incapacity of the patient to tell what caused it, or even what pains he now suffered, baffled inquiry as to the true cause of disease. All that could be done in such cases was made some general remarks on the treatment of epileptic in anity, and the audience, after a general invitation from Dr. Fletcher to "come again, and come often," dispersed. The object of the clinic was less to instruct old practitioners than to stimulate students to the study of a branch of medical science hitherto somewhat neglected by the general practitioners. Dr. Thomas, who, in connection with Drs. McClure and Browning, has charge of the male department of the hospital, gave a brief narrative of the histery of each of the cases from his official memo-

These clinical lectures will be concluded next
